To Develop Power-From the Ocean.

Is a cherished dream of scientists to come true after long years? A German electrician claims to have invented a machine which utilizes the power of the ocean waves so that dynamos on shore can be made to develop electricity enough to light streets and buildings.

If this be true, he has solved the problem of future fuel supply, for no longer would coal be required for cooking, heating or power when electricity could be had so cheaply, all the power light and heat the world required would be at as long as man. The economical saving of such an invention would be beyond comprehension and could hardly be spoken in figure. Foodstuffs clothing, transportation and a thousand luxuries and conveniences would be greatly reduced in price. Electric lights would displace all other luminants. Electric power would move the trans-continental trains and all vehicles, besides turning the wheels of labor. The cooking and eating of the home would be done by electricity.

A few years ago this discovery, if it be a discovery, would not have meant so much to the world as it does to-day, because the inventive geniuses of the General Electric Co. had not then solved the problem of long distant power transmission. After this concern introduced the first oil-cooled, high-power transformers long distant transmission of high voltage was made possible, and to-day current generated on the sea coasts. Such transformers are used in carrying the power from the Kern river project to Los Angeles, a distance of 112 miles; from Niagara Falls to Syracuse, and in a dozen places in this country. Canada and Mexico.

Badly Mixed Up.

Abraham Brown, of Winterton, N. Y., had a very remarkable experience; he says: Doctors got badly mixed up over me; one said heart disease; two called it kidney trouble; the fourth, blood poison, and the fifth, stomach and liver trouble; but none of them helped me; so my wife advised trying Electric Bitters, which are restoring me to perfect health. One bottle did me more good than all the five doctors prescribed. Guaranteed to cure blood poison, weakness and all stomach, liver and kidney complaints, by J. H. Orme, druggist, 50c.

PLANT THAT COUGHS

Takes This Way to Free Its Pores From Choking Sand.

"I heard a cough and looked behind me nervously," said a huntsman "for I was stalking gazelles in that lion-colored waste, Sahara desert, and having got so far south I expected at any moment to become a pin-cushion for the poison darts of the dread Tonaregs."

"But there was no one there. The flat desert quivered in the sunshine, and here and there a dusty plant stood wearily. But though I commanded the landscape for a radius of 50 miles, not a living creature was in sight."

"Another cough. I swung around quickly. The same plant yellow with dust, drooped in the dry heat. That was all."

"Hack! Hack!"

"On my left this time. I swung around again. A like plant met my eye. The thing was growing rather ghastly."

"As I regarded this last plant a cough came from it. Believe me, the plant coughed. It shook all over, and then, tightening up as a man does when he is about to sneeze, it gave a violent cough, and a little cloud of dust arose."

"I found out afterward that the plant was the coughing bean, which is common in many tropical countries. In the long dry heats this weird growth's pores become choked with dust, and it would die of suffocation were it not that a powerful gas accumulates inside of it, which, when it gains sufficient pressure, explodes with a sound precisely like the human cough."

"The explosion shakes the plant pores free of their dust and the coughing bean is in good health again."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Resolutions.

When as the infinit God, who does all things well, has seen fit to invade our ranks and pluck from our midst a friend and fellow class-mate, Dr. T. B. Hunter, and as we greatly deplore the loss of him from our class.

Be it Resolved: That our class has lost a faithful and tireless worker, whom we have all learned to love and honor.

That every member of the class remember Dr. Hunter as his friend, and that it is with sadness that we look upon his vacant chair.

That in the senior class extend our sympathy to his bereaved family and recommend them to the Great Physician who heals all sorrows.

That a copy of this resolutions be spread upon the college records, a copy be presented in his home paper and a copy be sent to his family.

Imperial Must Pay for Tobacco.

Princeton, Ky., June 13.—By a decision rendered by the Circuit court today, the Imperial Tobacco Company, and not John Orr, was the owner of the tobacco burned in the warehouse fire here December 1, 1906. The Imperial company purchased the tobacco from Orr November 15, but claimed that the delivery of the tobacco was not made on account of a question arising as to the ownership of the tobacco. The court holds that the Imperial Company and not Orr was the owner of the tobacco and that bill of sale given by him was good and sufficient.

Some Suggestions.

A baby should be kept very quiet immediately after nursing. White oak bark tea makes a good wash to correct offensive perspiration.

Dress the hair in a becoming fashion, regardless of what is the latest style in coiffures.

Raw egg applied to a cut will tend to heal the wound quickly, as well as allay the pain.

A good corn remedy consists of equal parts of sweet oil and iodine shaken together. Apply at nights until relieved.

Gouty persons should avoid eating sweet food, but the practice of eating a dozen walnuts a day is recommended by physicians.

Nose bleeding has been alleviated by holding the hands over the head and putting ice to the nose and back of the head.

Buttermilk is claimed by some physicians to be a cure for various ills, such as constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and indigestion.

A child's bed should be placed out of a direct draught and where the morning sun will not shine into its eyes and awaken it before the proper time.

CARING FOR THE OLD.

The Humane Way Vienna Treats Its Aged Poor People.

In most towns there is a tendency in this our day to deal more generously with destitute children than with destitute men and women. In Berlin and New York, for instance, both money and thought are lavished on the young whom the community supports, while, as for the aged, what is given them is given only of necessity. In Vienna it is otherwise. There the arrangements for the relief of the old people are better—both more carefully considered and more liberal—than those for the relief of children, a fact that says more perhaps for the hearts than for the heads of the authorities.

If a man or a woman above sixty is without money wherewith to provide for himself or the strength to earn the money, he applies to the guardian of his ward for help. Then, if he has a home to live in and some one to take care of him or is able to take care of himself, he is granted out relief, a money allowance if he can be trusted to spend it wisely; otherwise relief in kind. Supposing, however, he is homeless, feeble and "alone standing," he is sent to a versorgungshaus, or old age home, if there is a vacant place there, and, if not, to a small poorhouse until there is.

Versorgungshaus are the distinctive feature of the Austrian poor relief system so far as the aged are concerned. Already in the days of Joseph II. Vienna had two, if not more, of these homes, and at the present time it has six. One of them is reserved exclusively for citizens; another, that at Mauerbach, is reserved for persons who, owing to their perverted notions as to what is seemly, cannot be accorded the full liberty the old people in the other homes enjoy. In all the six together there is space for more than 6,000 inmates. As the versorgungshaus are looked upon by classes and masses alike as the homes of the aged poor, the place where they have a right to be, no disgrace is attached to going there. It would no more occur to an Austrian ex-worker to be ashamed of living in a versorgungshaus than it would to an English veteran to be ashamed of being at the Chelsea hospital. There is not a touch among the inmates of that pariah feeling which is so painfully evident among the inmates of our workhouses. On the contrary, they all seem to be extremely glad to be where they are and to be rather proud than otherwise of being there. And as it is with them, so it is with their relatives. There is no inclination on their part to look askance on these old people or to shun them. On Sundays and holidays, indeed, the homes are thronged with visitors come to have a chat with old friends and relatives and tell them the family news. They bring their little presents more often than not—caps with bright ribbons for the old women, neckties, perhaps, for the old men—for great importance is attached to personal appearance in the homes, and, although the inmates are provided with good clothes and are given a voice in deciding their color and form, they are not provided with finery.—Edith Sellers in Contemporary Review.

Worse Than Murder.

An old negro preacher of southern Georgia had been given a fine fat possum by some of his admirers and was keeping it in a barrel, feeding it heavily, to still further increase its weight. He had decided to have it killed the next day, when, to his rage, it was stolen in the night.

Shortly afterward a revival meeting was being held, and among those who went up to the mourners' bench was a certain very black Jim, and his grief seemed inconsolable.

"Dat's all right, mah brudder!" the old man shouted. "Don't matter whut yo' done, de good Lawd gwine fergib yo'!"

"But Ah's been powerful mean," Jim declared, weeping.

"Is yo' stole chickens?" the old man demanded.

"Oh, wuss en dat!"

"Good Lawd, hep dis po' nigger!" the old preacher entreated. "Is yo' used a razor?"

"Wuss dan dat!"

"Is yo'—yo' ain't done killed no body?"

"Wuss dan dat!"

"Den hyab's whar we tangle?" the old man shouted, throwing aside his coat. "De good Lawd kin fergib yo' ef he wants ter, but Ah's gwine skin yo' alive. Yo's de vermint dat stole mah possum!"

Carrying Out Instructions.

There was a young man whose social education had been somewhat neglected, and it chanced that he received an invitation to a church wedding. The morning of the ceremony found him quite excited, and he started for the church some time before, as he would have said, "the show was billed to come off." Under his arm he carried a small bundle, and before he had proceeded far he met a friend.

"Hello," said the friend, "and where are you going all dressed up at this time in the morning?"

"Wedding," answered the young man briefly and proudly.

"Indeed! Going to do some errands on the way?"

"Certainly not."

"But you're not going to a wedding with a bundle under your arm?"

"Of course I am. That's my present."

"Present! But you don't take your present with you, man. You send it beforehand."

"That's all you know about it. I've got a card right here in my pocket, and the card says, 'Present at the church.'"
